

Cornwall Murder Files

In this intriguing book Patricia Gray documents a dozen cases of murder committed in Cornwall in the later decades of the last century and five in the present. Each in their time caused something of a sensation, as murders always do in small communities. The death sentence was still available to judges who heard a number of these cases, adding a further lurid quality to the public interest in them. The author has selected crimes which give coverage of the whole county, including one in the Isles of Scilly. The motive for each varies, some the result of robberies gone wrong, others caused by lovers passions, greed and jealousy, and one involving terrifying child abuse. In a number of instances the murderer faced the ultimate penalty, in others acquittal came following lengthy trials. The book ends with a number of murders as yet unsolved.
