

She looked well, yet felt lifeless. Was she a drama queen? Or crazy? Since childhood, Diane E. Robertson suffered with chronic swollen glands, sore throat, and overwhelming fatigue. Symptoms often vanished as quickly as they appeared, and doctors found nothing amiss. Decades later, she was diagnosed with a life-threatening illness - systemic lupus. Though scared, she felt a peculiar freedom - she wasn't crazy after all. I have lupus too. As I read KEEPING THE WOLF AT BAY by Diane E. Robertson, I saw myself in many of her descriptions of life with this mysterious illness. The book is easy to read and can be beneficial to newly diagnosed lupus patients. As Ms. Robertson points out, many initially feel scared and misunderstood. KEEPING THE WOLF AT BAY could help them realize they are not alone on this journey. - Maggi McQueen, Chairman of the Board; Lupus Foundation of Florida
