Not illustrated. 1861 Excerpt: ...With those I now speak of--whether for good or evil, the truth comes out. I remember a curious instance. Let me preface it by reminding the reader that natural religion precedes spiritual; and that to praise God for what He is in Himself is a higher exercise than to thank Him for what He is to us. The occasion I refer to was a thanksgiving Sunday for a gracious change of weather. A certain choir, singing the Te Deum, sang all the adoration passages, Heaven A and earth are full, &c., so fast as to be irreverent. On the other hand, when they came to the Thanksgiving Hymn they had to sing the words--Fountain of good! from Thee proceed The copious drops of genial rain; Which, through the hills, and through the mead, Revive the grass, and swell the grain; and this they sang with so much of the linked sweetness long drawn out as to make the contrast another parable. I mean no censure on the singers. It was but one of the numberless cases alluded to in a former Letter, of the musician photographing himself. But this also is Natures voice: and we are religiously bound to learn it, if we would speak to nature. God comes down to us, so as we almost disdain to come down to our fellow-worm. He speaks heavenly truths in the very language of nature. But what shall we say of Liturgical music that knows nothing of nature?--cold form--pedantic artifice--notes that speak only to the ear of science? Study this little parable, and pronounce, when you have really studied it, on so-called church music that eschews all the instinctive utterances of natural feeling--that elsewhere is familiar, for instance, with the very nicest discrimination, not of the relative length of the individual note only, but of...
