

Through Norway with a Knapsack (in 1853) (Norwegian History)

A wonderful travelogue from 1856 of an English professor who had decided to travel through Norway from end to end without any baggage except one change of clothes, a notebook and a revolver. But he brought money which he uses very sparingly, living as basic and low cost as possible, and requiring no luxury or comfort in his accommodations on the long trip. He walked most of the trip, carrying all his belonging in his homemade knapsack which he was very proud of. Here and there he had to purchase services from local people, for instance ferrying him across a fjord or lake, or assist him in finding the way across mountains. He had to accept very crude meals at the rural station houses (post stations) where he once had to sleep in newly stored hay and had to dig himself down in the hay totally naked to avoid the million little creatures in the hay that would otherwise get under his clothes.
