

To Hell I Must Go: The True Story of Michigans Lizzie Borden

On a cool, spring day in 1897, Alfred Haney left his Williamston, Michigan home to earn a days wage. He knew his wives peculiar behavior had become more frequent, and he had planned on her seeing the town doctor, but she assured him she was feeling much better. They would go the following day instead. When he returned home later that day, he discovered a macabre murder so bizarre that it shook the entire community to its core. His mothers severed head was set on the dinner table, adorned with a knife and fork on either side. Lying nearby was the old womans body, soaked in kerosene and set ablaze. Screaming, Alfred Haney ran from the house in search of the law, and while neighbors tried to extinguish the smoldering, beheaded corpse, Haney's wife, Martha, removed herself to the back yard and began digging wildly with her hands. Shortly after the discovery, a sheriffs deputy arrived, taking Martha into custody and lodging her in the local jail at the village hall. Ingham County Sheriff John Rehle, known as J. J. among his constituents, arrived by train and surveyed the carnage. He and his deputy discovered the murder weapon, an axe, hidden behind some boards under the rear stoop. Rehle organized a Coroners Inquest that was held inside the house where the old womans body lay. In an attempt to determine her state of mind at the time of the crime, local doctors interviewed the murderess. She told them she spoke frequently with her own dead mother, and her mother had told her to kill the old woman. Over the next several days, court hearings decided her ultimate fate. A panel of three doctors was commissioned to determine her sanity. In the end, there would be no prosecution. Deemed insane, she was sentenced to the Michigan Home for the Dangerous and Criminally Insane in Ionia. What made Martha Haney snap and behead her mother-in-law? Had she been insane from the beginning? Had domestic violence pervaded her short life? Or was it the eventual loss of her three children to adoption that drove her to commit this awful deed? This is the true story of insanity and murder. It chronicles the five days of investigation and court hearings following that horrible day, and provides an insight into an insane womans mind, while furnishing the reader with a historical perspective of 19th century law enforcement and the judicial system in place at the time.
